THE LONELY PROFESSION

Strong performances and a good suspense yarn are served up in this "World Premiere" movie for TV.

Attempts on the life of singer Karen Menardos, once the odds-on favorite of a reclusive billionaire, send her to private eye Lee Gordon for help. But the frightened girl can't be saved: she's murdered as Gordon stands watch in her suite. While the police search for Gordon, he starts his own investigation into the girl's past.

Written and directed by Douglas Heyes. Cast . . . Gordon: Harry Guardino. Charles Van Cleve: Dean Jagger. Donna Travers: Barbara McNair. Karen: Ina Balin. Bannister: Joseph Cotten. Savarona: Fernando Lamas. Farber: Jack Carter. Beatrice Savarona: Dina Merrill. Lieutenant Webber: Stephen McNally. Julian Thatcher: Troy Donahue.

FOOTBALL SPECIAL (C)
10:00 2 3

100 YEARS OLD AND STILL KICKING

Special: "Football is some kind of extension of our lives," says reporter Charles Kuralt. His judgment is illustrated by films chronicling the sport's first 100 years.

On camera (footage before the 1950s is black-and-white) . . . 1869: color painting of the first college game, Princeton vs. Rutgers. 1903: film by Thomas Edison sheds light on the sport at the turn of the century. In the second decade, Jim Thorpe runs the game into greater prominence. The 1920s: it's now a mass attraction, due in part to the running heroics of Red Grange. And coaching becomes a profession (Knute Rockne is seen in one of his famed locker-room pep talks).

In the Thirties, passing comes into its own with QBs like Sammy Baugh and receivers like Don Hutson. Football becomes more a part of our culture with such films as Judy Garland's "Pigskin Parade" (1936), satirizing the stereotype dumb college recruit. The 1940s: Army's Glenn Davis and Doc Blanchard run wild. The 1950s and '60s: with TV's help, football booms.

The pros are remembered, too. Organized in the 1920s, pro football has come a long way to reach thrilling precision. Films of the 1969 Super Bowl make the point. (60 min.)
